NATIONAL REPUBLICAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 8, 1881.

A STUDY FROM NATURE. BY AN AMATEUR. Some people preach about the ant

The tumble-bug discounts them all For earnest work and industry. He labors with a loyal love. This little type of toll and zeal, And fears not fashion's fret or frown

And buzz about the busy bee;

I've watched him at his willing work, Preparing for the rainy day, And saw how skillfully he shaped The burden that he bore away. Like some spry acrobat, his feet

When catering for his morning meal.

Are used, and with such vigor, too; No matter if the road be rough Or smooth, Me's sure to tug it through. continues he with obstruction meets. That turns all topsy-turvy o'er;

But soon, the precious prize secure, He's tumbling toward home once more. He never knows such word as fail; The struggle never brings defeat: And thus he tumbles on through life,

With happy heart and flying feet. Though humble in his ways and taste, This gem of truth is taught us here: That those who seek for sure success Must ever toll and persevere.

A Disputed Water Tax.

Mrs. Sarah M. Rittenhouse, who resides on Twenty-eighth street, near Q street, Georgetown, one days ago complained that the West stree water main was assessed against the adjoining perty, notwithstanding the fact that the main was for the benefit of Washington, and not of Scorgetown. The Commissioners have replied by account of her long frontage, allowed a subivision to be made, making the lots owned by Mrs. R only fifty feet deep. This assessment is in conformity with law, and will have to be paid to ex-Capt the property from lien of the water tax."

River, and the view is a very beautiful one, I assure you. Before me, extending to the water's edge, are rolling fields and neat hedges, clothed in living green. The noble river dances and sparkles in the sunlight; here and there is a white sail, hurrying on to some distant port with its cargo; over the river the hills and woodlands of New Jersey are sharply defined against the eastern sky; to the right, like a grim sentinel, stands Fort Delaware. This fort was built many years ago on a small island in the river, called the Pea Patch, which took its name from a legend current in these parts of a vessel laden with peas having sunk at this spot, and the seeds, taking root, formed a nucleus for the formation of this island. The port was destroyed by fire in 1831, but was rebuilt some years after that time, and during the late war ten one time. Many of these men were broken down in health and almost destitute of clothing when taken there; they had suffered from fatigue and exposure, and often for the want of proper food, and the close confinement and discomforts of the the graves of those unfortunate men.
